

Cultural safety training for health profession accreditation contributors

Build your cultural safety capability

All accreditation authorities have endorsed the National Schemes Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander Health and Cultural Safety Strategy.

By doing this course you will:

- Increase your knowledge and understanding of what cultural safety means and how it's applied in health care.
- Appropriately interpret the application of standards that are related to cultural safety.
- Develop the knowledge and tools to confidently accredit and monitor health education programs.

Cultural safety is a foundational requirement, not a 'nice-to-have'. Experts involved in the accreditation of programs for the health profession are required to understand what culturally safe care means and can confidently assess how it's applied. Our understanding and practice of cultural safety continues to evolve: opportunities for professional development are most welcome. – Professor Shaun Ewen, Chair of the AMC Aboriginal and/or Torres Strait Islander and Māori Committee and physiotherapist

About the course

01 — PRE - EVALUATION

Check your knowledge and understanding

02 — SELF-DIRECTED LEARNING

Six online modules to build your knowledge about cultural safety and learn the skills to be an effective accreditation contributor within a culturally safe environment.

03 — MODERATED DISCUSSION

A full-day facilitated discussion with other accreditation contributors across the health professions to share ideas and discuss learnings from the self-directed training and activities.

04 — Post evaluation

An opportunity to rate your level of perceived change in preparedness and knowledge and to provide feedback.

Email your health profession accreditation authority to sign up